Tutorial: How to Use a Product Key, Activation Status, and License Keys A: If you had a retail copy of Office and need to activate it, it is not possible to do it from a bit of a file on your PC. You need to have the Office executable and the product key which is printed on the box you received. Usually that is a CD (or DVD) that you are supposed to burn. If you bought a trial copy which is usually activated by pressing a key on the box you received then your product key is embedded into it and you will not be able to get it otherwise. A: You don't need a product key to activate an Office product. However, the reason the key is on the box is because the copy is a genuine copy of Office (or Office Client) and the product key is added to the disk by Microsoft. If the copy was a demo or trial version and was not activated then there is no product key on the CD/DVD. So how do you activate an Office product? The usual way to activate an Office product is to use the product key that is on the box. You can tell if the key is on the box by simply reading the back of the box. You will see your licence details. If you don't have this box then you won't be able to activate the copy. However you can still run Office on a temporary trial version, this is not the same as a genuine copy but allows you to use a single office product without worrying about your licence expires. If you don't have a box you can contact the Microsoft store you bought the product from and they will probably be able to help.
